

Go to:

Guardian Unlimited

Advertisement

GuardianUnlimited

|              |       |            |       |                 |            |            |      |        |
|--------------|-------|------------|-------|-----------------|------------|------------|------|--------|
| Home         | UK    | Business   | Audio | Podcasts        | The Wrap   | News blog  | Talk | Search |
| The Guardian | World | News guide | Arts  | Special reports | Columnists | Technology | Help | Quiz   |

Search this site

Comment

My dad's murder is part of the last conflict demon

Michael Finucane
Thursday June 28, 2007
The Guardian

The decision by the director of public prosecutions not to prosecute any army or Royal Ulster Constabulary officers over the role in the murder of my dad, Pat Finucane, is disappointing but not surprising. Perhaps the most curious thing about the decision is that it makes a perverse kind of sense. After all, why prosecute people for doing the job you asked them to do in the first place?

This is what is at stake in the issue of collusion, and prosecuting people would have opened a murky world the government wanted kept hidden. In fact, the word "collusion" has become the adjective of choice for what was, in reality, British government policy in Northern Ireland since the 1970s.

Article continues ▾

The advertisement features a pink header with the 'web'n'walk' logo on the left and the T-Mobile logo with the slogan 'simply closer' on the right. The main text is centered and reads: 'Surf the whole web on your phone for £7.50 a month'. At the bottom right, there is a call to action: 'Take the tour' followed by a pink arrow icon pointing to the right.

---

The official version was that state agents were infiltrating Loyalist paramilitary organisations in order to prevent what they were planning to do. There are problems with this explanation. Firstly, the activities continued despite the existence of agents, and many people were still being murdered. Secondly, this explanation conflicts with the internal reports of one of the main agencies responsible for running the agents.

State collusion with paramilitaries remains a festering sore in the way of rehabilitation from conflict-riven wasteland to modern, autonomously governed democracy. The responsibility here lies firmly with the government, which has never accepted that the state was a participant in the conflict.

This is the last conflict demon to be exorcised in Northern Ireland and if the society we hope to create is to have the best chance of overcoming the past then the truth must out. The answer is to expose and confront the facts. An independent public judicial inquiry, invested with all necessary powers and autonomy to do the job required, is the only vessel capable of bringing Northern Ireland across its last Rubicon.

commentisfree.co.uk/michael\_finucane

• Read the full blogs and join the debate at guardian.co.uk/commentisfree

Special report
Northern Ireland

Timeline
13.09.2004: History of the Finucane case

Full text
The Stevens inquiry

Profile
17.04.2003: Sir John Stevens

In quotes
17.04.2003: Reaction to the Stevens inquiry

Obituary
17.04.2003: Brian Nelson

---

Printable version | Send it to a friend | Save story

Privacy policy | Terms & conditions | Advertising guide | A-Z index | About this site
Join our dating site today

Guardian Unlimited © Guardian News and Media Limited 2007

Read today's paper · Jobs

Search:

Guardian Unlimited
Web