

- Departments
- News Releases
- A to Z Index

Northern Ireland
Executive

- Home ▾
- A to Z ▾
- Feedback ▾

Search

- Your Government
- Ministerial code
- Government Departments
- News releases
- Executive statements
- Executive Publications

Location: Home > News releases > Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister >

08 October 2007 - Joint statement by the First Minister and Deputy First Minister on the post of Commissioner for Victims and Survivors

First Minister

Good morning. We have asked you here today to tell you how we intend to move forward to the appointment of a Commissioner for Victims and Survivors. We thought it was important that we should do that together, to demonstrate that on this issue we speak with one voice.

I know there has been a lot of ill-informed speculation that the deputy First Minister and I have been at loggerheads over the

Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister News

- 08 October 2007 - Society needs secure and happy children - Junior Ministers
- 08 October 2007 - Joint statement by the First Minister and Deputy First Minister on the post of Commissioner for Victims and Survivors
- 05 October 2007 - First Minister congratulates Prince's Trust Volunteers
- 03 October 2007 - McGuinness meets with NICICTU
- 03 October 2007 - Cross border initiative will promote racial equality - McGuinness
- 01 October 2007 - Ministers celebrate international older people's day
- 01 October 2007 - McGuinness urges appointment but that simply isn't true. Yes, we have taken time to consider the best way forward but that is just as it should be.

This is an important appointment impacting on some of the most vulnerable people in our society and we need to know that victims and survivors, who have suffered so much for so long, are represented by the very best person for the job.

That person will have an enormously difficult, sensitive and vital job to do for all those who have been touched by the events of our troubled past. Many of them have told us that they feel left behind as society here has moved forward. We are here today to say that no-one will be left behind, least of all those who have paid such a personal and harrowing price.

We inherited a process commenced under direct rule ministers. However, we are now operating under a new political dispensation which has democratic endorsement and support across the community. We want to take full ownership and full responsibility for empowerment of marginalised groups

Latest News

- 09 October 2007 - Good progress on £2million investment in Carrickfergus
- 08 October 2007 - Three convicted of benefit fraud at Craigavon court
- 08 October 2007 - Newtownards woman convicted of benefit fraud
- 08 October 2007 - Society needs secure and happy children - Junior Ministers

View All Latest News

-  RSS NEWSBYRSS
Latest News RSS Feed
-  News Releases By Department
-  Archived News Releases \(1999 - Mar 2007\)

this process. It is important that the person appointed to this post has the full democratic endorsement associated with a process taken forward under our administration.

To put it bluntly, we believe that some potential applicants may have been deterred from putting themselves forward for the post during direct rule because they could not be confident of securing the broad political support of the local parties that they would need to become a true champion for victims and survivors in Northern Ireland.

Deputy First Minister

That is why we have decided that we should extend the appointment process and re-advertise the position. We believe that re-advertising the post now against the background of a fully functioning Executive will bring forward a greater number of candidates. Victims and survivors are a key priority for us and we want them to see that we are searching as widely as possible.

The successful candidate will also know that they will have the unwavering support of the First Minister and myself as they address the needs of all those who have suffered great personal loss over the years. This morning we are appealing for all those who believe they have a contribution to make to this vitally important task to come forward and apply.

We would like to stress at this point that this decision in no way reflects on the people who were deemed appointable under the direct rule process. We fully acknowledge both their calibre and commitment. In fact we are asking those individuals if they would agree to their names being carried forward into this newly extended process. They won't have to reapply, will not be re-interviewed, and will be considered along with any further applicants who are deemed appointable.

The final stage of the process will involve a presentation to Dr Paisley and myself personally by all candidates deemed appointable before a final decision is made.

We consider this to be an essential new element of the appointment process.

In making our decision we have consulted fully with the Commissioner for Public Appointments and she is content with our approach. What we have decided is designed to serve the public interest and to achieve the statutory purpose to the fullest.

We have already asked our officials to take this newly extended process forward. This will entail, among other things, a further advertisement for the post. We intend to announce the new Commissioner for Victims and Survivors before the end of the year.

In closing, we would like to say that we have not played politics with this issue – it is much too important to us. We have simply done what the people would expect us to do; we have deliberated long and hard before jointly coming to what we both emphatically believe to be the right decision for everyone. There has already been too much ill-informed comment and controversy about this issue. We must avoid compromising the appointment procedure and are therefore not going to make any further comment today. All we ask now is that no one else should play political games with our decision. We think everyone would agree that the victims and survivors deserve better than that. Thank you.

© Crown Copyright Terms and Conditions Accesskeys